and the message that they are really trying to convey. Sometimes, you can feel the same confusion when talking with colleagues about how to help our junior leaders develop. There is a justifiable problem in finding a common definition or understanding of the words we hear tossed around during such conversations: mentor, coach, and counsel.

Difficult Conversations: How to Discuss What Matters Most

statement is a don't/do statement that clearly states the message you are NOT trying to send and then states the message your ARE trying to send. Example: "I am not trying to say that my program is more important than yours. I am trying to communicate that we both have high stakes involved in terms of the success of our programs."
